Knowledge Workers and Mobile Technology

Tuesday, February 6, 2007

Event Type:
Presenter:

South GIG Meeting
Michael Dziak, President, e-work.com

Content Overview:

Mobile technology has changed everything. Millions of knowledge workers are now working wherever they can get a signal. But are they really working effectively?

As a consultant, author and trainer, Michael Dziak, President of e-Work.com, Inc., discuss the challenges for workers and their managers to routinely work away from the office.

His company has recently released two eLearning courses currently being used at Microsoft that help employees and their managers learn what it takes to work more effectively in a distributed work environment. Michael will also share his experiences converting classroom courses into eLearning courses.

Michael Dziak began his consulting business in 1991, having worked with BellSouth, the City of Atlanta, Georgia Power, Georgia-Pacific, the State of Georgia and several other large Georgia employers to establish telework programs. His book "Telecommuting Success" is the content for one of the two e-Work.com courses
